GENERAL SUMMARY.

Parliament is to be prorogued to-morrow. After eighteen days' trial, the jury in the Roupell case have been discharged, without a verdict.

The demand for money is very moderate. The Russian replies to the notes of the three Powers are considered very unsatisfactory. The points are virtually rejected, and France is charged with allowing revolutionary schemes to be concocted in Paris. Instead of a European Conference a Conference of Russia, Prussia, and Austria, is proposed.

Vicksburg surrendered unconditionally to General Grant on the 4th July, and Fort Hudson surrendered on the 9th. After the fall of Vicksburg, General Sherman is said to have attacked and defeated General Johnston.

Military preparations are still going on in Russia.

A revolutionary spirit is said to be rapidly spreading in Prussia.

The second Confederate invasion of the North is at an end. General Lee, after the battle at Gettysburg, on the 2nd instant, retreated to Hagerstown, and has recrossed the Potomac, with his trains, supplies, and the whole of his army, with the exception of 1500 men who were captured by the Federals.

On the application of the Governor of New York, Mr. Lincoln has suspended the description draft.

Sir Charles Wood brought in the India Budget on the 29th instant.

The French press, in the first instance, received the Russian answer in a congratulatory spirit, and we were very much inclined to follow the lead at home, but little by little the embarrassments with which it was encumbered became more and more apparent as the fog cleared up, and at last people began to say that there was no hope of anything approaching to a satisfactory solution of the difficulty. On Saturday, the 26th, the feeling that there might be a European war was so strong in the city that there was a serious decline in the value of public securities. There appears to be little probability of England wilfully taking up arms, but Heaven knows how soon, when once a European war has commenced, Great Britain may, in spite of herself, drift away from her anchorage into the stormy waters.

AMERICA.

The American news received this morning (27th July) is important.

General Meade officially announces to General Halleck, under date of 15th July, that General Lee and his whole army had crossed the Potomac, at Falling Waters, with the exception of one brigade of fifteen hundred men, two guns, two caissons, and a number of small arms, which were captured by the Federals.

Later intelligence says that 500 have been captured; in addition, General Pettigrew, a Confederate, has likewise been killed.

The Tribune says of this last movement, that General Lee has not only carried off the spoils of his Pennsylvania invasion, but that the laurels of the campaign subsequent to his defeat at Gettysburg belong also to him.

The latest advices from Vicksburg state that the paroling of prisoners had been completed, and that they number 31,277.

Immediately after the surrender General Sherman moved in the direction of the Big Black River, and on the following day fought a battle with General Johnston, whom he defeated with a loss of 2000 men. This statement needs confirmation.

Richmond journals of the 14th July publish a despatch stating that a New Orleans paper, of the 10th, announces the unconditional surrender of Fort Hudson to the Federals on the previous day.

The attack on Charleston has recommenced. This time the Federals are seeking to take Fort Sumter in the rear. They had driven the Confederates with heavy loss from every part of Morris Island, except Fort Wagner, which they were attacking both from land and sea.

In Tennessee, General Rosecrans was still driving Bragg before him, and had captured 4000 prisoners.

There had been serious riots in New York, caused by the enforcement of the draft. The city appears to have been for two days, at least, given up to the ravages of a lawless mob, who plundered private property, destroyed buildings, murdered negroes, hanged a Colonel O'Brien, and perpetrated outrages of every description.

Something like martial law had been proclaimed when the latest intelligence left New York, and there could be no doubt that the rioters would be put down with a strong hand. The riot seems to have degenerated into a thieves' row.

The events of the American war are full of variety. Lee's army, estimated at 100,000 men, invaded Maryland, and succeeded in isolating Washington; at this juncture General Hooker resigned command of the Federal army, and was succeeded by General Meade, who at once pushed forward to Gettysburg, where the Confederates had concentrated their forces, and a succession of engagements, lasting from 1st to the 4th July, took place with tremendous slaughter, but, as usual, no result. The Confederates retreated, carrying away their wounded and large stores of booty. On the same day General Pemberton is said to have surrendered Vicksburg.

General Pemberton is reported to have committed the absurdity of offering to surrender, and of declaring in the same breath that he was able to prolong the resistance indefinitely. General Grant refused to accept the surrender unless it was unconditional, and to this General Pemberton at once agreed; whereupon Grant consented parole to the garrison of 20,000 men, and entered Vicksburg, taking possession of 102 field pieces, 30 siege-guns, and 50,000 stand of small arms. It appears that the garrison yielded to starvation, which, if true, shows that Pemberton's boast of his power to maintain the place was mere bunkum.

THE POLISH INSURRECTION.

The Polish news consists of mere collections of conflicting telegrams about the various struggles between the Poles and the Russians, the palm of victory being always awarded according to the place from which the news is dispatched. But however the accounts may differ as to the results, they all develop the one undeniable and palpable fact that the insurrection is being maintained with unflinching spirit, and that if locally suppressed at all, it is only put down in one place to break out afresh in another.

Two desperate encounters had taken place at Mordose, and at Lawkow, in Lithuania.

FRANCE.

"The course of events," says the Globe's Paris correspondent on July 24, "had prepared every one here for the preliminary indication of the coming rupture; and the announced withdrawal of the Russian Ambassador, Balabine, from the Court at Vienna, is held to be the first premonitory shock of a general diplomatic break-down. Austria's rejection of any hole and corner conference altogether upsets the Gortschakoff combination (meant merely for temporising), and precipitates the proffer of an ultimatum, at least as far as France is concerned. No one here can discover any issue but immediate war. Nothing but war occupies the attention of the French Press."

The Courier du Dimanche asserts that England and France are about to despatch a reply to St. Petersburg, which by its character as well as in the method of its transmission will imply the abandonment of negotiations.

Austria, upon the other hand, does not think it her duty at present to close the door to diplomatic negotiations. The Memorial Diplomatique still hopes that Russia will terminate by consenting in presence of the unalterable agreement of Austria with the Western Powers to replace Poland on the conditions of a solid and durable peace. This journal believes that the three Powers will promptly send to St. Petersburg a note, which although not an ultimatum, will announce in it that they intend to close all future discussion with Russia, and that they will henceforth be mindful only of the interests of Europe, now seriously compromised by the prolongation of the troubles in Poland. France hopes that diplomacy has not yet uttered its last word; but avers that even if it has, the result already obtained is immense.

ITALY.

The official document relating to the affair of the Anna, and the arrest of the five brigands at Genoa, have been published. They confirm the explanations already made public with regard to the arrangement of the dispute, in which France and Italy have agreed.

MEXICO.

La France asserts that information received, via Havana, proves that President Juarez has been wholly abandoned by his troops, that he has in consequence renounced his intention of occupying San Louis Potosi, and that he is making his way towards the Pacific coast in the hope of being able to embark for New York.

COMMERCIAL NEWS.

LATEST CITY INTELLIGENCE.—The stock market continues depressed. Speculative realisations and operations directed to lower prices are alike advanced by the continued agitation of the Polish question.

The Paris Bourse, though slightly better in price, is also disturbed and sensitive.

The following are the closing prices on the Stock Exchange:—Three per cent. Consols for money, 92½ to 93; ditto for account, 92½ to 93; Three per cent. reduced 93 to 92½. New Three per cent. 93 to 92 and ¾. Bank Stock, 238. India 5 per cent. Stock 108 and ¼ to 108. Exchequer Bills at par to 3s. premium.

Additional News.

THE CHANCES OF WAR.

[FROM OUR MELBOURNE CORRESPONDENT.] THE brave stand which the Poles have made in their struggle for freedom, no less than the conspicuous cruelty and injustice of Russia, have awakened the deepest interest, and Austria, France, and England have addressed severally notes of remonstrance to the Cabinet of St. Petersburg. The replies have been received, and it is not to be concealed that they have thrown the capitals of the great kingdoms of Christendom into a state of excitement such as they have not witnessed since the fall of the first Napoleon. Austria has already taken a step which shows clearly her sense of the gravity of the situation. The proposal of Prince Gortschakoff for a conference between Prussia, Russia, and Austria, shutting out the other Powers who were parties to the treaty of Vienna, Austria regards as an attempt to detach her from her alliance with France and England; and without waiting for any further communication with those Powers, she has transmitted a note to the Russian Government respecting the proposed Conference, and announcing her determination to maintain the policy laid down in her former note, and to act throughout in concert with England and France.

The three Governments are now in deliberation upon the next action to be taken. It is rumoured that the reply of France is already prepared, but the statement is probably premature, as whatever is to be done will now, in all likelihood, be a joint proceeding. Of one fact we have the highest assurance on all sides, that the three Powers, to use the emphatic language of Lord Palmerston, are under an engagement to act together. While the Cabinets are deliberating, the people are in commotion. Vienna and Paris are in a state of the greatest excitement, and the utmost indignation is expressed at the haughty tone of the Russian answers. In St. Petersburg, we hear of still more marked manifestations of popular apprehension, and there, it is said, war is considered almost inevitable.

In London we are more calm, as is our wont. There are not many or any very striking signs of uneasiness, but the subject occupies all circles, and has for the present superseded all other topics.

AMERICA.

A Ministerial crisis is spoken of at Washington. Mr. Seward is said to have suggested a line of policy which would have reversed nearly all Mr. Lincoln's previous acts. The advice of the Secretary is summed up in the presentation of a Presidential proclamation offering an amnesty, and withdrawing the emancipation proclamation, suspending the Confiscation Act, and offering security to the property and rights of the Southern people. In fact, granting everything to the South on their own terms and in their own way.

A decisive majority of the Cabinet opposed the proposition, and the Republican party counterbalanced it by demanding the restoration of peace and the Union on the basis of the extinction of slavery in 1876. It does not appear that these differences in the Cabinet have produced any consequences.

THE WAR.

The first great movement of the month was the invasion of Maryland by General Lee with 150,000 men. At this juncture General Hooker resigned his command of the Federal army to General Meade.

The Confederates appear to have gathered in their forces, and massed them in the shape of a triangle—the base resting on the railroad that runs between Chambersburg and Shippenburg, the apex being formed by the small town of Gettysburg; to that point General Meade at once pushed forward. General Reynolds, who commanded the first Federal division, passed through Gettysburg, and finding the enemy collected in force rashly prepared to give battle.

General Reynolds occupied one of the hilly ridges near the town, but the Confederates took possession of still higher ground, and he was consequently exposed to a heavy fire in flank and front. In this perilous situation General Reynolds displayed great heroism. For two hours he fought under the most disadvantageous circumstances, and when at the end of that time he was at last joined by Howard, it was too late to turn the fortune of the field. Howard, in endeavouring to effect a junction with the 1st division lost three thousand men, and Reynolds had already lost half that number. After an ineffective struggle both divisions were finally obliged to retire with the loss of 4500 men, including many officers of all grades, one of them being Reynolds himself.

On the 2nd, both the opposing Generals were employed in placing their troops in position. General Lee evidently contemplated a flank movement, nor is it likely that the engagement would have been renewed on that day had it not been for an accidental collision with a wing of the Confederate army which rapidly spread until both lines were fully engaged. The fury with which the Confederates assailed the wings of the Federal army, especially the left wing, was at first highly successful; but with the aid of reinforcements the Federals finally drove them back and regained their positions. Three times victory fluctuated in this way; but when night closed in both armies held their original ground.

On the 3rd, General Lee renewed the attack with undiminished ardour. For three hours he directed a heavy cannonade against the Federal army, and twice assaulted its left and centre. The slaughter was tremendous.

On July 4th, the anniversary of Independence, General Lee retreated and succeeded in carrying off his wounded, his trains, and it is said large stores of booty, before the enemy were aware of his movements. The retreat was conducted with masterly skill, and when the Federals commenced a pursuit the Confederates were enabled to offer so successful a resistance that they ultimately established themselves without loss or difficulty in a position of considerable strength. Ten days had elapsed after the battle of the 3rd, and the Federals had effected nothing more than the transport of their troops to a position in front of the invaders where they either await the signal of battle, or intend to initiate it themselves. The latter is not probable, his position is so strong that it would require a more powerful army than his own to dislodge them, and although both armies have received reinforcements, it does not appear that General Meade is in sufficient force to act on the offensive.

The Confederates are posted at a place a little to the south-east of Hagerstown, nearly due south down to a point covering the Williamsport Ford over the Potomac, and the Federals occupy some heights in his front.

General Lee is believed to have already transported his wounded and a portion of his stores across the river into Virginia, and to have secured his retreat should fortune prove adverse to him. A battle was considered imminent.

WOOL.

The public sales of colonial wool opened on the 16th July. The attendance from Yorkshire and the Continent was numerous, but the latter did not appear disposed to operate to the same extent as at last series; however, the biddings ruled decidedly active, and in some instances an advance, chiefly in medium qualities of wool, of ½d. per lb. took place, compared with last sales. The arrivals at that date were 7534 bales from New South Wales and Queensland; 30,976 from Victoria; 9060 from Tasmania; 13,907 from South Australia; 120 from West Australia; 11,876 from New Zealand; and 10,727 from the Cape. Total, 104,200 bales.

Messrs. Bradbury and Cook's public sale of English wool, held on the 15th instant, passed off with a moderate amount of animation at the full prices current in the private contract market. There is less doing in English wool privately, at late rates.
